United States of America - Weather

U.S. MIDWEST: Much of the Midwest will continue to see favorable conditions for developing crops through the next two weeks with at least another week of no crop-threatening cold expected. Although many areas will dry down during the next week to ten days, enough soil moisture is in place to support crop development and with rain expected by the middle of the month. Nearly all locations should have enough soil moisture to support the needs of crops to maturity.

U.S. DELTA AND SOUTHEAST: Hurricane Dorian will continue to move northward through Thursday and will be near the central coast of South Carolina by Thursday afternoon before moving near the coast of North Carolina into Friday bringing heavy rain and some flooding to areas from northeastern Florida and far southeastern Georgia into the eastern and interior eastern Carolinas.

South America - Weather

BRAZIL: Little rain of significance is expected through the next week outside of Rio Grande do Sul and much of the moisture from rain during the past weekend will soon be lost to evaporation. Greater rain will be needed to induce a more lasting increase in soil moisture to improve conditions for planting.

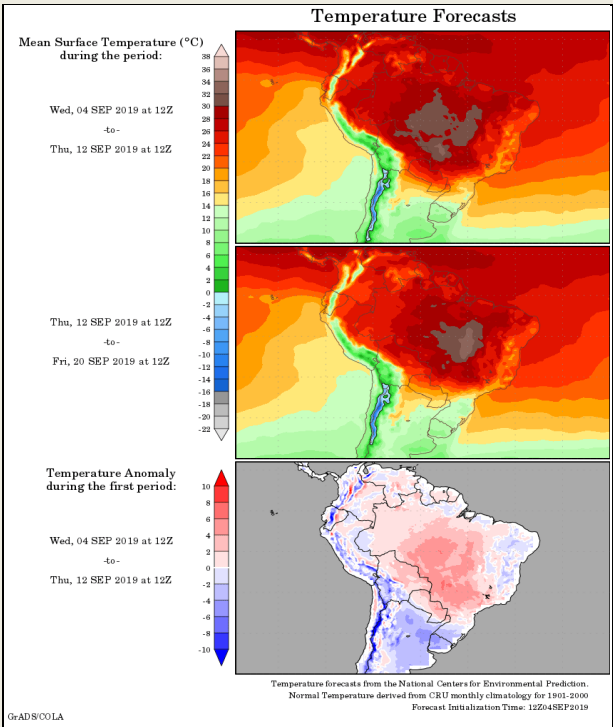

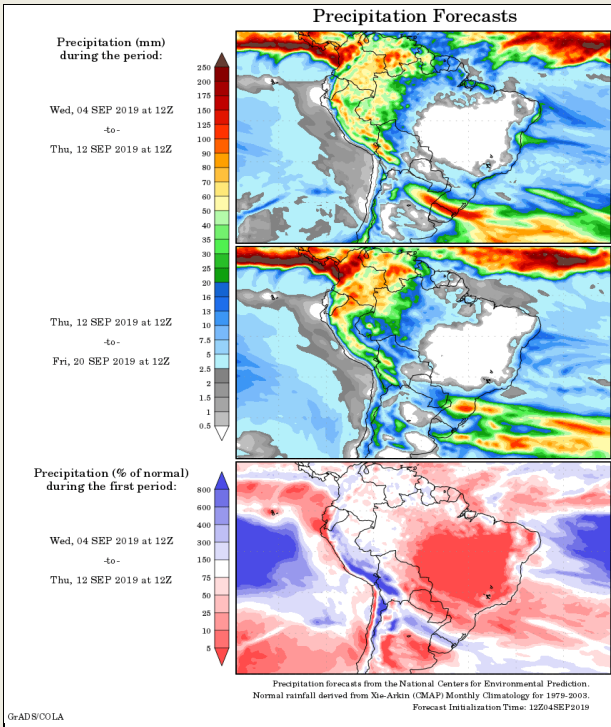

ARGENTINA: Some of the increase in rain made for western Argentina in Tuesday's forecast has been reduced and outside of Santiago del Estero, by the end of the next two weeks, the remainder of western Argentina will remain in need of greater rain to improve conditions for winter wheat. Some light showers will occur in northeastern Argentina Friday into Saturday before rain increases Sunday into Tuesday.

Europe, New Zealand and Australia - Weather

EUROPE: Restricted precipitation and drying will continue to impact portions of Europe this week.

- Little to no rainfall will occur over Spain and France as well as Greece into east Bulgaria and southeast Romania and dryness concerns will prevail
- Meanwhile, rounds of precipitation will eventually occur elsewhere in Europe this week.

AUSTRALIA: Restricted precipitation and drying will impact western and east-central Australia during the next ten days to two weeks. East-central Australia drought is not likely to change and winter crop development will remain poor and a reduction in cotton, sorghum, corn, sunseed and other crops will be possible if drought prevails into October. Meanwhile, the break in rain will allow fieldwork to progress in Western Australia, although some greater moisture would still be welcome in northern production areas.
