South Africa - Weather

Western Cape, Northern Cape, and Free State's main winter wheat locations will see a mix of rain and sunshine during the coming week. The precipitation will be beneficial for any crops that are still in the reproductive stages. Maturation and early season harvesting will otherwise be sluggish at times. Minor quality reductions will be a growing concern in the wettest locations of Western Cape. Eastern and central South Africa's main summer crop areas will otherwise see a good mix of rain and sunshine through the middle of next week. Most locations outside portions of Limpopo and North West will receive enough rain to gradually bolster soil moisture. Germination and establishment conditions will gradually improve. However, Free State, North West, Limpopo, Northern Cape and neighboring areas will need additional rain to completely fix the moisture deficits.

United States of America - Weather

U.S. MIDWEST: The lower Midwest will additional precipitation through Thursday while most of the west-central and northern Midwest is dry before a period of restricted precipitation occurs Friday through Nov. 11 across the Midwest and allows for harvesting to resume and be completed in most areas. Temperatures will warm during the next few days and that will allow the snow pack to melt in the western Corn Belt.

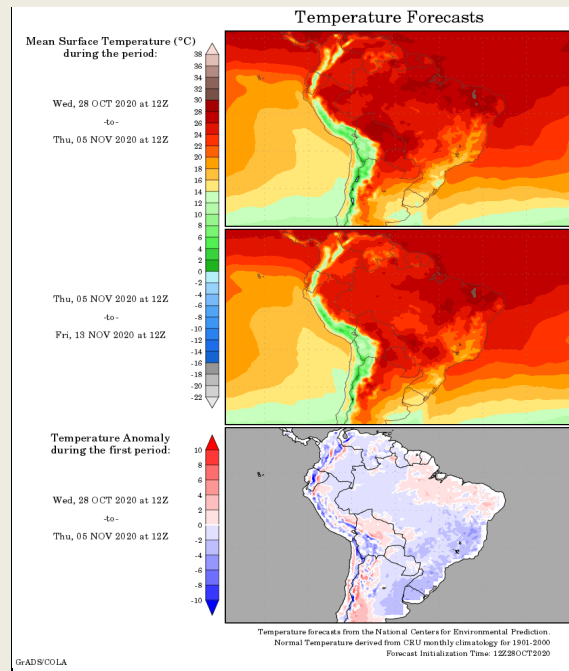

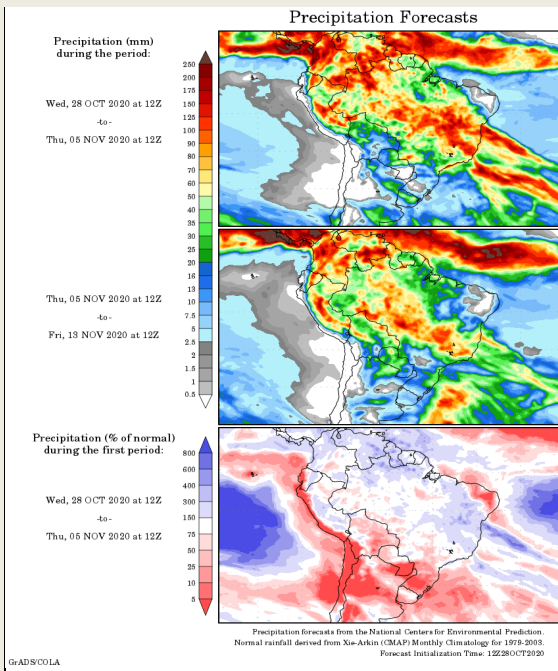

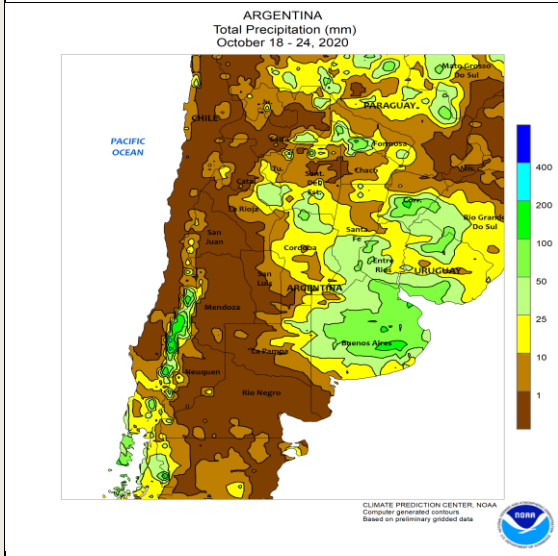

U.S. DELTA AND SOUTHEAST: Hurricane Zeta will make landfall on southeastern Louisiana this afternoon and will produce sustained winds near 90 mph before moving to northern Georgia and then southern Virginia Thursday with moderate to heavy rain expected into Thursday from the Delta through western, central, and northern Alabama, and northern Georgia to southwestern Virginia. o Zeta's winds should not be strong enough to threaten most crops outside of coastal areas, but heavy rain and winds could cause cotton that has suffered from boll rot to be blown out or strung from its boll with such conditions not likely to be common.

South America - Weather

BRAZIL: Recent rain and expected rain through Friday should leave Parana and Sao Paulo with enough soil moisture to favorably support crop development through the next two weeks, but a boost in rain will be needed soon to ensure crops do not become stressed by a lack of soil moisture. ARGENTINA: A restricted rainfall pattern will continue across Argentina through most of the next two weeks and by Nov. 11 most areas will have dried down significantly allowing for good planting progress while many western and northern areas will be left with short soil moisture and could see some crop stress if the rain event advertised for Tuesday through Friday, Nov. 6 falters.

Europe, New Zealand and Australia - Weather

EUROPE: Rounds of precipitation will continue to expand over Western Europe the next ten days. Greater rainfall will be confined to southeastern France into Switzerland and surrounding areas as well as a small band from northeastern Germany into northwestern Poland today. Organized and widespread precipitation will return to the U.K., France and northern Spain Saturday into Sunday and shift into Switzerland, southwestern Austria, Italy, Slovenia and the eastern Adriatic Sea Nations early next week.

AUSTRALIA: Rain will continue over eastern Australia this week. The moisture will continue to benefit cotton, sorghum and other summer crops, but concern over northern winter crop quality will continue to increase until rainfall declines. Western Australia is still too dry and most locations will experience no significant changes
