South Africa - Weather

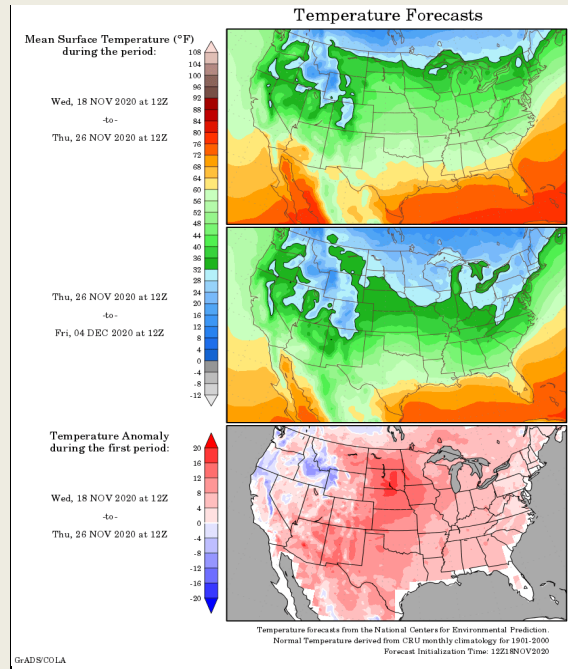

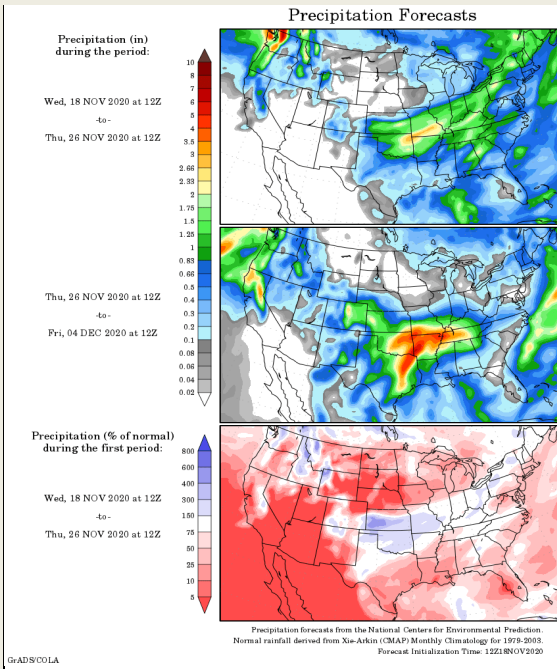

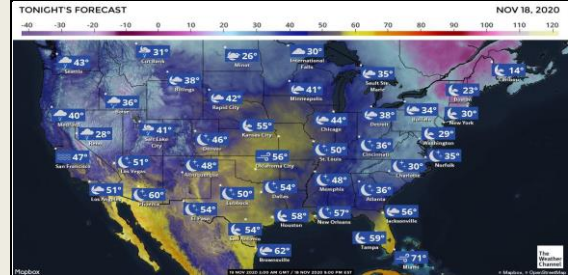

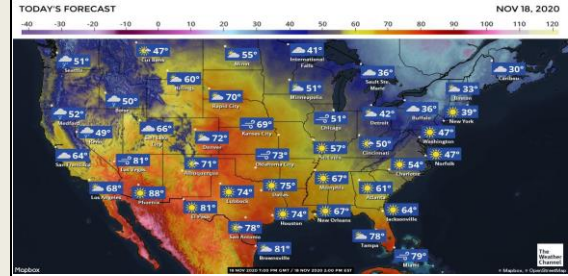

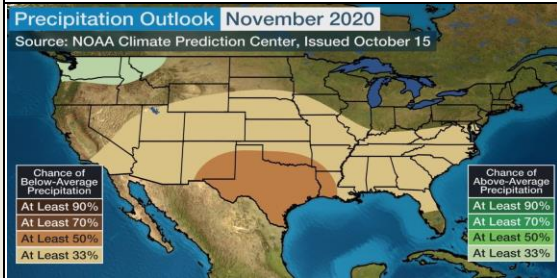

Eastern and central South Africa's main coarse grain and oilseed areas will continue to see a good mix of erratic rainfall and sunshine during the coming week. The rain will be enough to support generally favorable establishment and growth. Planting will also advance swiftly around the rain events. However, additional rain will still be needed late this month into December to completely reverse the moisture deficits and maintain a good environment for most crops. The rain will also slow or delay winter wheat harvesting in Free State, North West, and eastern fringes of Northern Cape. No significant quality declines are expected. Western Cape will otherwise see mostly favorable conditions for winter wheat harvesting through the middle of next week. Other than a few light showers, the region will be mostly dry. The rain that does occur will be too light to impact long-term soil conditions.

United States of America - Weather

U.S. MIDWEST: A restricted precipitation pattern and mild temperatures will occur through most of the next two weeks and harvesting should soon be completed in nearly all areas.
 o Two rounds of precipitation will occur with late harvesting and post-harvest fieldwork likely to advance well before and after each precipitation event.
U.S. DELTA AND SOUTHEAST: The Delta and the Southeast will see dry conditions most often through the next two weeks and harvesting should advance well around the occasional round of precipitation expected. Today through Saturday will be mostly dry.

South America - Weather

BRAZIL: Showers and thunderstorms will continue today in much of Brazil and portions of Paraguay and most areas should be left with enough soil moisture to support crops when a nearly week of drier weather begins in most areas Thursday while portions of north-central and northeastern Brazil see additional rain.

o There will be some exceptions as west-central into central and southern Rio Grande do Sul has missed much of the recent rain and will miss today's rain and may see increases in crop stress as soil moisture declines.

ARGENTINA: Argentina will see a restricted rainfall pattern and good planting progress through most of the next two weeks and crops stress may increase in the drier parts of the country, but today's forecast is wetter for Monday into Wednesday of next week and that rain event should buy most crops more time before serious stress evolves. A general increase in rain will be needed soon in early December to ensure soil moisture is supportive of crop development and if that increase in rain does not occur, crop stress should steadily rise as moisture from rain next week is lost to evaporation.

Europe, New Zealand and Australia - Weather

EUROPE: Restricted precipitation will allow for swift crop maturation and harvesting in most of mainland Europe this week. The most organized precipitation will occur from western and northern portions of the U.K. through Scandinavia and eventually into northern Poland during the coming week. Drying will occur in northern Poland through the remainder of the workweek. Moisture totals will vary from 0.30 to 1.00 inch and local totals varying from 1.00 to 2.00 inches by this time next week.

AUSTRALIA: Precipitation will be light and erratic during the next ten days to two weeks. Conditions will not be completely dry, but favorable conditions for winter crop maturation and harvest will prevail. Excessive heat will occur over Australia this week stressing livestock and some dryland crops.
