South Africa - Weather

Eastern and southern South Africa will see a mix of erratic rain and sunshine during the coming week. The precipitation will help improve the moisture profile in several locations, but will generally be too light to fully restore soil moisture. Planting will advance swiftly around the periods of rain. Establishment and growth will be mostly good due to the rain, though more precipitation will be needed later this month to ensure favorable long-term crop conditions. Harvesting of winter wheat may be sluggish at times in Western Cape and eastern fringes of Free State.

The remaining production areas will be drier biased during the coming week. The lack of rain will be beneficial for aggressive winter wheat harvesting in Northern Cape and the remaining portions of Free State. Planting of the summer crops will also advance with few disruptions. However, the ground will be too dry to support aggressive establishment and growth. A good soaking of rain will be needed later this month for more favorable crop development.

United States of America - Weather

U.S. MIDWEST: The Midwest will see a restricted precipitation pattern through early next week and harvesting should increase and soon become aggressive.

o Only one round of significant precipitation is expected with that event advertised for Nov. 10-12 and confidence for its details low. Fieldwork will be set back for at least a little while during this event.

U.S. DELTA AND SOUTHEAST: The Delta and the Southeast will see more sunshine than rain and good harvest progress during the next two weeks with rain events tonight through Thursday and Nov. 11-12 causing minor interruptions to fieldwork.

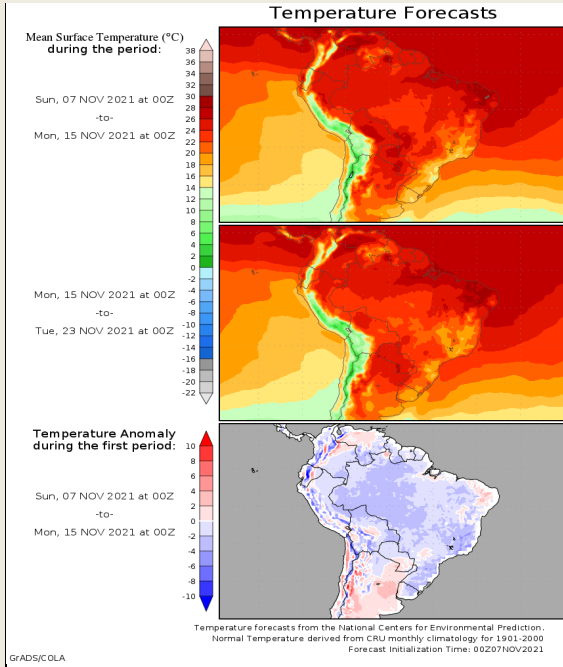

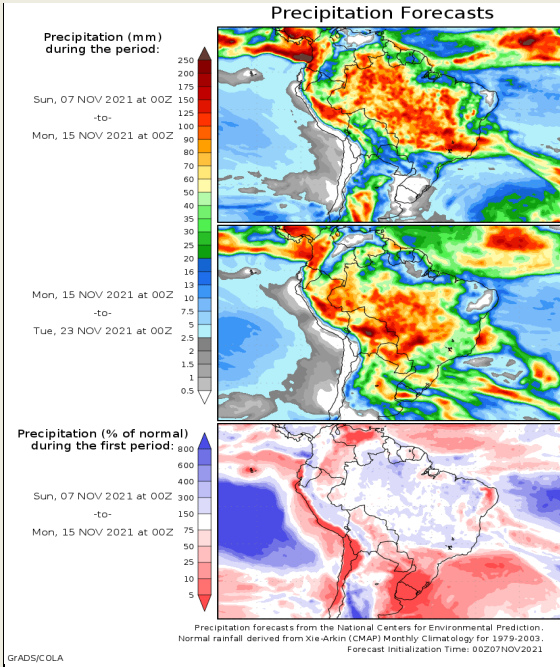

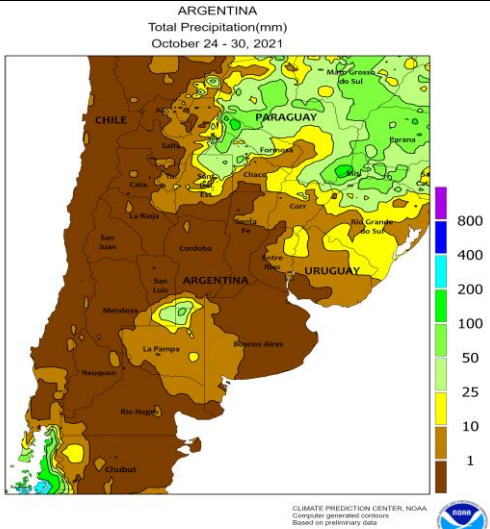

o The rain expected should cause some temporary cotton discoloration while winter crops benefit from increases in soil moisture expected.

South America - Weather

BRAZIL: Northern Brazil will see frequent rain through the next two weeks slowing fieldwork and restoring the soil moisture while some flooding is likely as well.
 o Central and northern Mato Grosso to northern Minas Gerais and Bahia will be wettest and parts of the region should receive 5.0-10.0" of rain and locally more during the next two weeks. Rio Grande do Sul to Sao Paulo will dry down during the next two weeks and fieldwork should advance well while at least some rain and adequate subsoil moisture in place today should keep the region from becoming excessively dry right away. Northern Parana and central and southern Sao Paulo will be driest and will need rain soon. Paraguay into Mato Grosso do Sul will see a good mix of rain and sunshine during the next two weeks with enough rain to support most crops while breaks between rounds of rain allow fieldwork to advance.
ARGENTINA: Regular rounds of rain will continue through Saturday inducing further improvements in soil moisture in the driest areas of the northwest while soil moisture should be left favorable for planting and establishment of crops in much of the country.

Europe, New Zealand and Australia - Weather

EUROPE: A low-pressure system will develop over the Mediterranean Sea this weekend and the storm system will become stronger early next week and heavy rain will develop over southern Italy and is expected to eventually meander over Greece late next week. Flash flooding will occur with the torrential rainfall.

AUSTRALIA: A favorable mix of rain and sunshine will continue over most of Victoria, New South Wales and southeastern Queensland during the coming two weeks. The moisture will support winter wheat, barley and canola development and production potentials. Summer crop planting will advance around the rain with the greatest progress in dryland areas after receiving increased moisture. There is no excessive rain expected which will benefit maturing winter crops, but greater rainfall is still needed to bolster soil moisture for summer crops. There is still plenty of time remains for the increased moisture to occur.
