South Africa - Weather

SOUTH AFRICA : Frequent rainfall is slated for eastern South Africa during the coming week. The rain will help keep soil moisture at adequate to excessive levels in most locations. Crop development conditions will remain mostly favorable across the region. Central South Africa will have a few opportunities for erratic rainfall during the coming week as well. The rain will be unable to significantly bolster soil moisture in most locations. However, there will be plenty of moisture to maintain aggressive growth. Western South Africa will be drier biased, though crop conditions will remain mostly good. • Eastern South Africa will see a good mix of rain and sunshine during the coming week o The region will initially receive little to no rain today and Friday before scattered showers evolve on a frequent basis this weekend into the middle of next week o Moisture totals by next Thursday morning will range from 0.75-3.00" and locally greater amounts in Natal and Mpumalanga o Drier pockets are also expected in Limpopo • Central and western South Africa will be drier biased during the coming week o Periods of erratic rain will still occur in central South Africa through Saturday o Moisture totals by next Thursday morning will range from 0.25-1.00" with local amounts of 2.00" or more in Eastern Cape o Any rain that occurs in western South Africa will be lost to evaporation

United States of America - Weather

U.S. MIDWEST : A significant surge of arctic air with very strong winds and blizzard conditions Thursday through Friday will lead to notable livestock stress and energy demand. Accumulating snow is expected in most of the region before the coldest air arrives which should mostly protect the winter wheat crop.

U.S. DELTA : Hard freezes are expected down to the Gulf of Mexico coast Friday through Monday which will potentially lead to some sugarcane crop damage. Well below average temperatures in both regions in the first week of the outlook will lead to high energy demand.

South America - Weather

BRAZIL: Timely rainfall is expected in most of the nation's production region during the next two weeks. Some net drying is possible in the far south and parts of Paraguay, but crop conditions elsewhere should be good for normal crop development. Pockets of dryness in the south and west should not be great enough to seriously impact nationwide production potentials and relief is probable in the second week of the outlook.

ARGENTINA: Argentina's rainfall advertised today for the next two weeks was reduced over that of Sunday and Monday; however, rain is still expected in most areas. The greatest coverage of rain will occur Thursday into Sunday at which time temporary relief from dryness is likely in all areas. The second week outlook today is drier – at least from the pure model perspective, but World Weather, Inc. believes the models are too dry and that periodic light shower activity and a few minor thunderstorms will continue to pop up from time to time through the first days in January benefiting some crops.

Europe, New Zealand and Australia - Weather

EUROPE : Increasing stormy weather through this weekend will lead to a snow event in areas such as Poland, Czechia, eastern Germany and some other nearby areas which will cause travel delays and livestock stress. Snow will also occur down into the northern Balkan Countries. Topsoil moisture will increase significantly in Spain where there is still some short to very short dryness.

AUSTRALIA : Erratic shower and thunderstorm activity in the next seven days may locally disrupt some ongoing harvesting; however, conditions are expected to be mostly favorable. Rain in eastern Australia will be beneficial for summer crop development. More rain will be needed though, especially in the driest areas.
